WE CAN AND MUST DO MORE TO END RACIAL INJUSTICE

---

We are heartbroken and angry. Over the last month, there have once again been injustices perpetrated against black people, resulting in numerous deaths, protests, and riots.

George Floyd. Breonna Taylor. Ahmaud Aubery.

The latest in a tragic long line. We are disheartened that our society continues to fall short in recognizing the unique experiences of people of color. These are extremely difficult times for our entire country. We all need to do more to address systemic oppression and work harder to bring about positive change. As a law firm, we stand committed to moving the dialogue forward. We are deeply committed to taking meaningful action to work toward equal justice for all.

Across our country, collective support is needed now more than ever to break through deep-rooted biases and prejudices that have historically hindered equality for so long. There are hopeful signs. The death of George Floyd has deepened the conversation on race and racism in America across a wide range of communities. The current outrage is calling for actions that perhaps can finally accomplish true and lasting change. As an organization, we want to be part of these conversations and actively participate in achieving change. As a law firm, we stand committed to moving the dialogue forward within our organization and the communities we serve and to making change.

We can and must do more. We are all better for it.
